

SECASTILLA

The Amphitheater, a Unique Landscape

The arrival at the Secastilla vineyard leaves visitors breathless, not only because of the steep climb but also due to the beauty of the landscape that unfolds upon reaching the vineyard. The vines are arranged on slopes, forming an amphitheater that serves as a stage for the Pyrenees mountains in the background. The beauty of this landscape compensates for the hard work and effort required to get here.

The Secastilla Valley, in the northeast of Somontano, is an ideal place for the cultivation of vines, olive trees, and almond trees, which intermingle to create a unique environment. This valley stands out for its rich biodiversity, where visitors can lose themselves and contemplate the ancient Garnacha vines that enjoy a perfect habitat in the midst of silence.

The Heroism of Vineyard Work

This area, at the foothills of the Pyrenees, is a real challenge for the viticulturist. The climb to the vineyards is an adventure in itself. The environment is preserved with minimal intervention, so the paths are narrow and weather conditions can make the ascent very difficult, especially during the snowy months.

Vineyards at an altitude of 700 meters and distributed on steep slopes make vineyard work a heroic effort; the stony and arid soils complicate this already arduous task.

The Garnacha

The preservation of the vineyard in such complex conditions is Secastilla's great challenge. Ancestral Garnachas, along with other native varieties, are carefully and diligently tended. The different vineyards are always worked by hand, with organic viticulture and very low yields for excellent grape quality. The stony and airy slopes ensure that Secastilla's Garnacha reaches its maximum expression.

All production methods are aimed at preserving authenticity and respecting tradition. Each stage of the process, from cultivation to vinification, is designed to maximize the expression of the terroir and ensure a unique wine.

Award-Winning and Recognized Wines

Secastilla wines have been recognized at various international events.
